This ambitious project will use theatre as a tool to explore community relations issues in a safe and accessible environment. People and communities most affected by the conflict/troubles are the main beneficiaries. The project is recruiting eight local artists and four internationally celebrated artists with significant experience of utilising arts activity in areas of conflict and social breakdown. An estimated 76 cross-community participants will be reached delivering approximately 2,200 hours of collaborative working time.

“Over the past year we have created theatre productions and artworks which enabled people impacted by The Troubles to share their stories, which have resonated with audience members. Our work is creating a space for truth, expression, hope and transformation for both participants and audiences.”

In this project theatre and the creative arts are implemented as tools to explore community relations issues, and generate discussion on the legacy of the conflict/troubles in a safe and accessible environment, promoting healing and reconciliation in a liberating, meaningful and transformative way.

"Loved In the Shadow of Gullion. It was moving, portrayed both sides of the conflict, and really captured what we all went through. Very moving."
